

*to understand these writings, readers must have read The Dictator's Handbook by Bruce Bueno de Mesquita and Alastair Smith. The term "youth" in this context means people ages 0-17, or people under the age of majority.

Governorship in a youth liberationist context is when a governing body is controlled either directly or through representatives, or replaced, though always through large coaliton governance.

For example, youth liberationist governship of a school would look like youth-controlled schools, in either the lightning-tied or tortoise-hare style governments, where kids 0-17 would vote directly on the rules and funding of the school.

Youth liberationist goversnhip of housing would look like youth controlled housing, using the lightning-tied or tortoise-hare style government, where all the kids 0-17 vote directly on the rules and funding of the school.

Governorship in a youth liberationist context proposes the largest functional nominal selectorate and the largest functional winning coalition in order to create a high quality of life and adhere to the human rights of youth.

Youth liberationist Governorship can also exist in organizations that are not directly geared towards youth, such as hospitals. Hospitals can have a youth liberationist appointee or appointees on their governing board, casting votes or vetos that impede the flow of policies that hurt youth liberationist interests. These youth liberationist appointees would still be voted in using the largest functional (so 50% or slightly below) coalition of youth. The nominal selectorate in this case would be all the youth in the maximum area that the hospital serves.

Youth liberationist appointees might be places on company boards to represent youth workers, casting their vote for or against different internal policies.

Another way governorship can be exercised is in cooperatives, where the youth workers run the business through the lightning-tied or tortoise-hare government.

Governorship in a youth liberationist context always requires that the governed take control of their governing institutions in a democratic manner. This means that any institution that governs youth, such as schools, youth-housing, companies, unions, hospitals, libraries, newspapers, city councils, and local, provincial, and national governments.

Many of the policies listed in "Policy Demands for Liberation" are an outgrowth of this Governorship requirement. Governorship is a human right for youth, who require a large-coaliton vote on the policies that they must submit to. Governorship in its best form is more than self-governance, it is the taking of large-coaliton and large-nominal-selectorate structures, direct democracy, and human rights, and applying all three to self-governance. To see two perfect examples of governorship, check out the lightning-tied government and the tortoise-hare government in the article "How to Build Youth Liberationist Organizations."

Youth liberationists must look to bring Governorship partially or in full if possible to any and every institution that has a tangible effect on youth, such as a hospital, newspaper, or company. Where governorship cannot be brought in full direct democratic form, representative democracy should be settled for in the form of large coaliton elected representatives. Companies can have large-coaliton elected youth-liberationist representatives placed on company boards (there must be enough representatives out of the total board members to ensure that youth have their worker's rights guaranteed in practice). Hospitals can have similar elected representatives placed on their board of trustees, but this time the voters will be all the youth ages 0-17 in the region(s) that the hospital serves. Youth run Newspapers should have their governing structure be either the tortoise-hare or lightning-tied style government, with all the youth in the nation as the nominal selectorate. Major news networks should have at least as many elected youth liberationist representatives to shield effectively against the production of both anti-youth and parent-slaver propaganda.
